THE MENTAL HOSPITAL AND HUMAN SERVICES

By Herbert C. Schulberg, Ph.D., and Frank Baker, Ph.D., both at the Laboratory of Community Psychiatry, Harvard Medical School.

Is there a role in the future for the mental hospital? Viewing the modern psychiatric facility in daily interaction with its environment, the authors have examined the numerous activities of the urban mental hospital as it carries out its community mental health and human services responsibilities. Applying the framework of open systems concepts, they explored for several years such factors as the institution's changing ideological climate, the utilization of its in- and out-patient services, and the modification of staff roles.

Their organizational development findings are related to the characteristics of patients accepted at different periods of time, the varied treatment approaches used with them, and patient outcome.

Important recommendations are made about the range of activities that must be sustained by the mental hospital if it is to achieve its goals of effective patient care in the context of community responsibility. This astute overview will be of value to all involved in the planning, evaluation, and development of mental health and human services.
